“My passion is to show that by Indigenizing health care, we are shedding the light on all people who are culturally diverse. I am able to mentor other Indigenous nursing students, and can share a deepened understanding and teaching of the changes that need to happen so all people can have access to healthcare and healing.”

“I have worked in the areas of long term care and influenza campaigns. While completing the second year of my Masters Nurse Practitioner program, I am working in the hemodialysis department and the cancer clinic and enjoy the variety of skill sets working in various areas.”

“My heart is set on community health nursing. My priority is to work with and advocate for underserved populations who face barriers to accessing health care in urban settings.”

We are almost there but need your help to reach that very important goal of $1 million in support of Indigenous nursing education and research.

“Through my research, I have identified Identity as a key role in integrating Indigenous ways of knowing into the classroom. I hope to bridge the gap that is apparent in education regarding Indigenous pedagogy and the lack of recognition of the significance of Canadian History of Indigenous peoples. With the change and push from the current government, I believe now Indigenous pedagogy will gain the credibility within academia. My academic career will be based on helping bridge this gap in a respectful manner and give credibility to Indigenous peoples history and importance for healing.

I have participated in Indigenous Ceremonies across several provinces and received many transfers of sacred knowledge. I choose to live a traditional lifestyle, and value the families I have gained while on this journey. This past year I attended ceremonies, went medicine picking with a group of Elders and I’m excited for what the future holds.”
