IN SUPPORT OF INUIT NURSING

Mabel Pokiak Lumsden was a pioneering Inuvialuk nurse and educator whose life transformed health care and representation in Canada's North.

Born in 1941 on Banks Island, Northwest Territories, she defied barriers facing Indigenous women at the time. After three years of training and a small leave of absence, Mabel was among the 118 members of W.G.H.N.S.'s graduating class and became Canada's first Inuk nurse.

Mabel served in remote communities across the Northwest Territories, where she was deeply trusted for both her medical skill and her ability to bridge traditional knowledge with Western medicine. She championed the empowerment of Indigenous peoples within healthcare.

In 1960, Mabel left her home in Tuktoyaktuk, Northwest Territories, driven by a deep commitment to serve others through nursing, with a special focus on pediatrics and obstetrics. Her career led her to some of the most remote northern communities, where her impact was profound.

Nationally recognized for her leadership, Mabel's life's work stands as a powerful testament to the value of representation, the importance of education, and the enduring power of perseverance in overcoming challenges.

Mabel left a legacy of strength, compassion, and advocacy that continues to inspire Inuit, First Nations, and Métis nurses across Canada.
